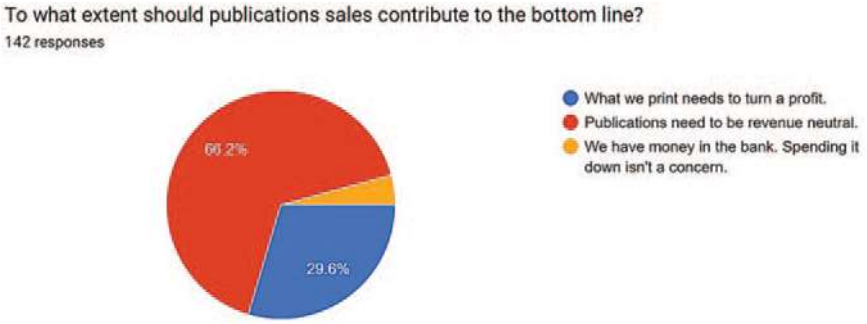
While AAMS members don't object to a fundraising program they feel strongly that it needs to pull its own weight. Frankly, considering that the purpose is to improve our balance sheet it seems like a reasonable requirement.



For a number of years there has been a lax relationship between our publications and the cost of production. Lately, the model has become completely unsustainable. While we have funds earmarked for producing publications, I feel strongly (as do 96 percent of you) that future publications need to strive to be revenue neutral.

In summary, the survey was a very useful experiment. It was easy to write, deploy and aggregate (Googles automatically generates the pie charts and an Excel spreadsheet). The response rate (27 percent) was most gratifying and encourages me to try another survey in a few months (what would you ask?). The responses point to a society that seeks change and I intend to push for it. As you consider candidates for AAMS leadership later this year, ask yourself whether they have the skillset and motivation to move us into our new century.
